THE BNAI BRITH

At the commencement of Yale University it was announced that Horeb Lodge of the Bnai Brith of New Haven, of which Joseph Ullman is president, contributed $6,000 in scholarships to Yale, to be given without regard to race, creed or colour. When we think of all the good works that different Bnai Brith lodges all over America have done, this act of Horeb Lodge deserves to stand in the front ranks. It is an expression of the goodwill of the Jew to all classes, irrespective of race, creed or colour, and is in accord with the traditional Jewish love of learning. We congratulate Horeb Lodge on carrying out an idea which we believe was conceived by Rabbi Dr. Louis Mann, now rabbi of Sinai Congregation, Chicago, and formerly rabbi at New Haven. In many places the Bnai Brith has endeavoured to help in Jewish communal undertakings of various kinds. It has made all things Jewish its concern, even the economic upbuilding of Palestine, into which work it came rather tardily.

To the Jewish lodges in Canada, we would suggest the establishment of scholarships for Jewish boys and girls in Canadian universities and conservatories of music. Increasing numbers of our talented young people are turning to higher education. There is not a single Jewish scholarship in any Canadian university. We are certain that the Canadian universities would welcome such gifts as that given by Horeb Lodge to Yale. Such scholarships express more than goodwill and an interest in higher learning. They are frequently the means which make it possible for an able and talented student to stay at the university and continue his education.

The larger Canadian Bnai Brith lodges in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg are located in centres where large and splendid universities exist. They would do well to imitate Horeb Lodge.

RELIGION AND SCIENCE

The meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science brings to Toronto the most distinguished students of science in the British Empire. In the last half of the nineteenth century the meetings of this Association were particularly watched by the theologians, who saw in the onward march of science the forging of the axe that would gradually chop down the old tree of religion. This was more especially true of the way in which theologians regarded the geology. Darwin's Origin of Species, published in 1859, split up the scientists into camps; those who believed in evolution and those who did not see in it a correct method of describing the genesis, growth and development of the species. It also served, on the other hand, to align the forces of religion against the small but effectual group of scientists of the type of Darwin, Huxley, Tyndal, Wallace and Spencer.

Even though many waters have passed over the dam since those days, the struggle still continues between religion and science. The present day conflict between the fundamentalists and the modernists, the authoritarians and the libertarians in the Christian Church is only a continuation of this old controversy. The fundamentalists insisting that if modern biology and geology offer an explanation of the genesis and development of man and nature, that is frankly at variance with the Book of Genesis and other parts of the Bible, then so much the worse for these sciences. They hold that the Bible is revealed. It is the word of God. It cannot be wrong. It stands unchanged for ever. This is the authoritarian approach to religion and life. Science under the influence of the method of evolution for that is all evolution, is a means of explaining the universe; it is a method of approach, is free and objective. It has nothing to defend excepting that which it finds experimentally to be true. It has no vested interests in the forms of churches and institutions and a clergy to checkmate it. It is the white light of critical analysis applied to material phenomena with a view of creating a body of knowledge that will stand without requiring the mediation of Revelation to give its truths sanction and authority. Happily this conflict between religion and science has never really created much heated controversy in Judaism and the synagogue. The reasons are several. For one thing, religion, as a constituent element in Jewish civilization, has always been regarded as a philosophy whose postulates and teachings must be based on Reason, with a capital "R." The philosophers and men of science are historically the outstanding expounders of Jewish theology. These men saw no contradiction between Judaism and science; no mysticism and certain forms of intuitionalism are to be found in Judaism; they represent the esoteric and not the exoteric currents of Jewish thought. The highway of Judaism is rationalism; mysticism forms one of these byways from which Christianity took its rise.

Secondly, since the teachings of the Jewish religion are rationalistic, they are not founded on miracles. Hence Judaism has nothing to fear from the modern biologic or geologic discoveries which contradict the fantastic Bible. A religious Jew need give up no essential among religious belief in order to accept the findings of modern science. As we view it, the discoveries of science are constantly testifying to God's existence and the stupendousness of his creative spirit.

Thirdly, the Jewish religion being rational and philosophic accepted freedom of thought as a cardinal principal and encouraged free inquiry and speculation. It did not hedge its free spirits about with any fences, excepting those of the ceremonial law which, when carefully analyzed, have nothing to do with religion per se. The Jewish ceremonial law, about which there is so much misunderstanding among Christian theologians, is nothing more nor less than the distinctive social group customs, folkways and moves of the Jewish people who wish to perpetuate their own Jewish civilization. Even Spinoza, the Father of Modern Thought, who was excommunicated by the Jewish congregation of Amsterdam, might have remained in the Jewish fold if he had but observed the Jewish ceremonial law. It is noteworthy that in every age of Jewish history the Jews have produced outstanding men of science and learning. In the early, dark days of the Middle Ages the Jews were the only people who kept the torch of reason and light burning. In the field of medicine they stood out particularly; they helped in the founding of the first medical faculties in Europe. In every branch of modern science and philosophy the Jews to-day have their quota of great contributors, with Einstein and Bergson in the lead. Dr. Chaim Weizman is a scientist of note. The number of Jewish men and women devoting themselves to the sciences is growing steadily larger. To the philosophical Jewish way of thinking, religion and science are two complementary methods of approach to the discovery of God's relation to man and nature, man's relation to nature, and man's relation to man. Science works in the world of matter. Religion labours with the intangible spiritual nature of man. It applies the findings of science to explain the existence and value of the spiritual.

Every great scientist realizes that science can at best answer the How of Life. It does not answer that spiritual hunger in man, which craves to know the Why of Life and what of the hereafter. Life can only assume meaning and value in the light of purpose, of a Divine purpose. The discoveries of science merely uncover that which is implicit in the created world. It organizes and synthesizes this knowledge into a body of immutable law. It has nothing to offer in explanation of the ethical purposes of life or the query, What is the soul, and does it

CAN YOU HELP THIS MAN?

J. Morris, 130 Welseley Street, who served two years in the South African War and four years in the Great War and has four medals, begs the Jewish people of Toronto to find him a situation such as a caretaker or a helper of any kind. He is willing to do anything and can give good reference.

"The American Mercury" has discovered a factory in Harrisburg which supplies speeches at the rate of ten for three dollars, such as ones "to be used in visiting lodges of Brith Abraham" and "to be delivered by the president of a Jewish sisterhood," and for every occasion where people listen to the silvery tongues that champion causes, give away medals, make presentations, and so on. This concern is a good thing to know about. If you make speeches it can help you. If you don't make speeches it may still help you by explaining some that you have heard and couldn't reconcile with the speaker.

"If human civilization is still to be saved, it can only be through the energetic awakening and alliance of the young people of the world, who sweep from the path of progress the monstrous idols of the past, the poisonous prejudices, the tyrannies, the lies. I have little hope of change in the generation which I belong. But my spirit and my heart have always been with the young, who travel always in the forefront, who never tarry, who carry in themselves faith in the future, and who want the sufferings of the old world to be destroyed and a new world, happier and better, to arise."

Chaim Nachman Bialik, the Hebrew poet who was once falsely slain, in print, by this paper instead of congratulated on an anniversary, is so far from dead that rumour says he is considered for the Nobel prize. We are always pleased to bring back Bialik to life in these columns in attempted repayment for a confused moment and sincerely hope some day to record that he has won the Nobel prize, if he wants it.

B.A.B., columnist for the "Jewish Tribune," is engaged in desultory warfare with the "Chicago Israelite", in which he has the heartfelt attention of all pen-pushers on those English-Jewish papers which reach the predatory exchange table of the Chicago paper. For a long time the Israelite's custom has been to take the cash and let the credit lines go, that is, to intersperse its own scintillant composition with what it liked in other papers and fail to acknowledge receipt of same. When taken to task by B.A.B., the editor, too graceless to plead even convenient kleptomania, admitted repeated misdemeanor on the ground that the stolen stuff was so good he or she couldn't resist. In that case it seems necessary for the column writers to change their point of view and it is our suggestion that the Israelite be regarded henceforth not as a culprit in any way but rather as a file cabinet for the rest of us, so that when we want to read from all columns we need only turn to one.

Speaking of papers and the long distance crows they find to pick with each other, let this paragraph be sent with love from us to the "California Jewish Review." Its editor has written to say that hereafter when we reprint editorials from his papers he insists on the credit line being at the top. Gladly. That is, if the "California Jewish Review" will please give credit for an editorial of Rabbi Brickner's swiped from this paper with a credit line nowhere in sight, and that is if it follows its own new rule with regard to stuff it removes from the "American Hebrew." As to the "marked copy containing a paragraph in which you give credit for the use of aforementioned editorials"— too much chutzpah is excessive, really.

REVIEW JUNIOR SECTION

Dear everybody:

Heigh ho! You must hasten with your competition entries, dear cousins, for just another fortnight of grace will be granted you. So, tarry not. The subject you know is, "How I Would Like to Spend the Summer." . . . And there will be prizes . . . nice ones.

And don't forget . . . this is "Get - Together Month" which means we're expecting a letter from every new and old cousin . . . Send yours right away.

All contributions for the Junior Section must be sent to CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW, 319 Bay Street, Toronto, Ontario. Any boy or girl is welcome to join our section and to contribute poems, essays, stories, riddles, etc. Just fill out this little card and mail it at once.

REVIEW JUNIOR SECTION:

I would like to join the Cousin Family of the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW.

My name is .....

I live at .....

I am ..... years of age.

My dear cousins:

I spent a very delightful hour with my friend who has just returned after quite a lengthy stay in Jerusalem, Palestine. Of course we talked of a million million things all at once, but the bestest ever was when she picked up a very beautifully carved wooden box, and said, "Do you want to see my jewels?" Well . . . as you can imagine, I did. There was a long string of very lovely Indian ivory beads, that was brought to Wembly by some Hindoo; a vanity box with a design in filigree that is as fine as the daintiest lace; some very quaint cords that are joined by silver tassels and are used to keep the turban shawls (that everybody in Palestine wears) in place; and most beautiful of all, a long necklace of silver and amber that is quite the prettiest thing I've ever seen. It was made in the Belzael workshop, where the craftsmen take joy in that which they are creating. The chain was fine and ever so delicately engraved and the amber . . . well, I daren't trust myself to mere words, when I'm about amber. This friend told me that the first time she wore that necklace she was walking in Jerusalem when a very old Jew approached her, touched the necklace and said in Hebrew, "From the Belzael shops?" . . . To which she answered, "Yes." . . . "I know," he replied; "you see, I made it." . . . But there are so many other things to tell you of . . . F'instance a flat round wooden box of sweets—preserved gingers and candied citrons and limes, and sugary figs, all sweet and spicy and vaguely suggestive of the East . . . and then she had lovely embroideries . . . I imagine that quite a few of my girl cousins know how to "pull threads" (perhaps some of you have made hankies that way, . . . but I venture that none of you can pull threads as the Arab women can. I don't know the whys or the hows, but I do know that I never hope to see such elaborate and intricate designs as they manage to get by just simply pulling threads. My friend tells me that a the children, even the very tiniest of the tiny, do this work, and that the women of one section scorn those of the neighbouring settlement because they have not "a good eye for colour" and their embroideries are crude!

All these things beautiful bits of pottery, hand-dyed wall-hangings, albums of sketches by Palestinian artists, lovely book ends of bronze make one believe that the beauty and the sincerity of Palestine is giving its artists truth and beauty as its keynote—truth, because nothing is ever truly great unless it is utterly honest; and beauty, because with sincerity, there is always loveliness. . . . I want to tell you of the work of one artist in particular, but there is little space to-day, so I must needs wait until next week. His name, though, is Abel Pann. And with that name to conjure with, I leave you for today.

Cousinfully,

Judith.

INDIAN PIPES

In the far-away forest under the hill,
Tall are the trees that grow,
And clear are the waves of the run-away brook,
As swift through the forest they flow,
And sweet are the songs of the sing-away bird,
Up in the tree tops tall,
But the dear little, queer little Indian pipes,
Are the prettiest things of all.
Dainty and white by the side of the rill,
In the far-away forest under the hill.

A LIMERICK

A young lady who stayed at Torquay
Went to sleep in a chair by the suay,
But a high tide soon rose
To the tip of her nose,
So she woke up and swam back to tuay.

What a fine world this would be if those who have money would use it as those who haven't money think they would use it if they had it, which they wouldn't.—Houston Post.

Dear cousinly cousins:

I hope that you are feeling particularly cousinful to-day, because I want to introduce a friend of mine, that I hope will be a friend of yours too. Her name is Katherine Mansfield, and she's a poetess. And the way to acknowledge the introduction is not at all according to etiquette books, for instead of saying, "How do you do?" to her, I hope that you will read and re-read her poems (and perhaps even whisper them to yourself occasionally). Then I'll know that you are really well on the road to getting acquainted. To-day she'll talk to you through a little poem that she called "My Brother's Secret." She loved this little brother very much. In some poems she calls him "Half-Past-Six" . . . and when it happened that he died, it seemed more than she could bear. But now I shall leave you together. Good-bye, cousins.

Ye Maker of Limericks.

POETS' CORNER

LITTLE BROTHER'S SECRET

When my birthday was coming
Little Brother had a secret:
He kept it for days and days
And just hummed a little tune when I asked him.
But one night it rained,
And I woke up and heard him crying,
Then he told me.
"I planted two lumps of sugar in your garden.
Because you love it so frightfully
I thought there would be a whole sugar tree for your birthday
And now it will all be melted."
O! the darling.

—Katherine Mansfield

SONG BY THE WINDOW BEFORE BED

Little star, little star,
Come down quick.
The moon is a bogey-man
He'll eat you if he can
Little star, little star,
Come down quick!

THE CANDLE FAIRY

The candle is a fairy house
That's smooth and round and white,
And mother carries it about
Whenever it is night.

Right at the top a fairy lives,
A lovely yellow one,
And if you blow a little bit
It has all sorts of fun.

It bows and dances by itself
In such a clever way,
And then it stretches very tall,
"Well, it grows fast," you say.

The little chimney of the house
Is black and really sweet,
And there the candle fairy stands,
Though you can't see its feet.

And when the dark is very big
And you've been having dreams,
Then Mother brings the candle in;
How friendly-like it seems.

It's only just for mothers that
The candle fairy comes;
And if you play with it it bites
Your fingers and your thumbs.

But still you love it very much
This candle fairy, dear,
Because at night it always means
That mother's very near.

Katherine Mansfield.

THERE IS A SOLEMN WIND TO-NIGHT

There is a solemn wind to night
That sings of solemn rain;
The trees that have been quiet so long
Flutter and start again.

The slender trees, the heavy trees,
The fruit trees laden and proud,
Lift up their branches to the wind
That cries to them so loud.

The little bushes and the plants
Bow to the solemn sound,
And every tiniest blade of grass
Shakes on the quiet ground.

Katherine Mansfield.

ON A YOUNG LADY'S SIXTH ANNIVERSARY

Baby Babbles—only one,
Now to sit up has begun.

Little Babbles quite turned two,
Walks as well as I and you.

And Miss Babbles, one, two, three,
Has a teaspoon in her tea.

But her highness, at four,
Learns to open the front door.

And her majesty—now six,
Can her shoestring neatly fix.

Babbles, Babbles, have a care,
You will soon put up your hair.

Katherine Mansfield.

I AM A RAIN WORM

By ISAAC LEIB PEREZ

I am a rain worm, buried deep
Among the oozing, slimy things;
Yet of an eagle's nest I dream,
And eagle wings.

I want to soar the boundless blue
Where winds and tempests have their birth,
And let the clouds conceal from me
Not heaven, but the earth.

—Translated from Yiddish by Jacob Robbins.

THE CANARY

By MORRIS ROSENFELD

Canary in the woodland
Trilling, trilling, trilling;
Who can sing of pleasure
And joy as well as thou!?

Canary in the palace
Trilling, trilling, trilling;
Who can sing of sorrow
And pain as well as thou?

SONG OF SAUL BEFORE HIS LAST BATTLE

Warriors and chief! Should the shaft of the sword
Pierce me in leading the host of the Lord,
Heed not the corse, though a king's in your path:
Bury your steel in the bosoms of Gath.

Thou who art bearing my buckler and bow,
Should the soldiers of Saul look away from the foe,
Stretch me that moment in blood at thy feet!
Mine be the doom which they dared not to meet.

Farewell to others, but never we part,
Heir to my royalty, son of my heart,
Bright is the diadem, boundless the sway,
Or kingly the death which awaits us to-day.

Hebrew Melodies—Lord Byron.

OH, WEEP FOR THOSE

Oh! weep for those that wept by Babel's stream,
Whose shrines are desolate, whose land a dream;
Weep for the harp of Judah's broken shell,
Mourn—where their God hath dwelt, the godless dwell.

—From Lord Byron's "Hebrew Melodies."

Call up in your darkest moments
The memory of the brightest.

—F. Richter.

THE PARROT

The day was all yellow and blue,
With little pink tippets of pearl,
As soft as the hyacinth hue
In the eyes of a babykin girl.

Dawn-red, through the lace of a tree,
A parrot was shining his wing;
Against the blue sky I could see
All the colours the bird couldn't sing.

The green and the blue that he wore,
The pink and the rose and the grey
These all he might fling me and more
Could he sing me a song for the day.

He could not. He passed out of reach
In emerald flight, jerky yet strong.
He left me a long, scarlet screech;
I made him this little green song.

Zora Cross in The Sydney Bulletin.

A WRITER'S MEMORY

Lord Macaulay's memory was a thing to marvel at. At the age of seven he knew Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel" by heart, after reading it at a house during a long call by his father. Before he was eight he could recite "Marmion" almost in entirety. He is said to have made the assertion that if every copy of "Paradise Lost" were destroyed, he could restore the Milton epic from memory.

An Enigma—My tongue is long, my voice is strong, and yet I breed no strife; my call you hear both far and near, and yet I have no life. What am I?

CONUNDRUMS

Which is swifter, heat or cold?
Heat, because you can catch cold.
Which flowers can be found between the nose and chin?
Tulips (two lips).
That beet's all.
When is the best time to read from the Book of Nature?
When the spring opens the leaves and the autumn turns them.
In what liquid does the Queen of England take her medicine?
In cider (inside her).
What is worse than raining cats and dogs?
Hailing omnibuses.
Your word.
Why is a queen like a hat?
Because they both have crowns.
Why is a plum-pudding like the ocean?

A Quebec Problem

Provision Must be Made for Education of Jewish Children
13,000 Educated in Schools Over Which the Jews Have No Control

(By James Wardlaw in "America")

A very able article recently published in the Catholic Educational Review suggests that some further reflections upon a unique school problem may not be without interest. In the Province of Quebec, it should be noted, there is no establishment corresponding to the "public school" of the States. The schools are either Catholic or Protestant. In all the municipalities, except in the rural districts where the population is wholly Catholic, there are Catholic and Protestant school boards or commissions. Taxes levied upon Protestant and Catholic ratepayers are assigned respectively to the Protestant and Catholic panels, while corporations of a non-religious character, and individual ratepayers who are neither Catholic nor Protestant, pay taxes into what is known as the "neutral" panel. The taxes in this panel are divided according to the population of the municipality, and when Catholics are in the majority they receive the larger portion. This, in brief, has been the policy in force up to a recent date, when unforeseen events caused a change.

Jews Patronize Protestant Schools

It is estimated that there are over 60,000 Jews in the City of Montreal. Of the thirty-five thousand pupils in the schools under the jurisdiction of the Protestant Board, there are approximately 13,000 Jewish pupils, all educated in schools over which the Jews have no control whatever, for in Quebec school officials are appointed, not elected. The question naturally arises: 'Why do the Jews patronize the Protestant schools?' About the year 1903, when the Jews in the city were too few in number to secure for themselves desirable educational facilities, they forwarded a petition to the Provincial Government. As a result, the Protestant Board in Montreal not thinking that the Jewish population would notably increase, agreed to care for the Jewish children. Since, in accordance with the laws of the Province, the parents had the right to decide what religious instruction the children should receive, the Jewish children were under the arrangement exempted from attendance at instruction in the Christian religion, formal contract, and it will be well to keep this fact in mind.

Demand Separate Schools for Jewish Children

At present the Jewish population is massed in densely-populated areas. In the western section of the city one finds the largest percentage of Protestants. The rapid increase due to a high birth-rate of the Jews, has obliged the Protestant Board to construct at least five new schools, all of which were at once almost wholly occupied by the Jews. The result is that the Protestant ratepayers have been obliged to pay for these Jewish schools, since the Jews pay into the "neutral" panel, and the major part of these taxes goes to the Catholic Commission. This unforeseen result certainly puts the Protestants in difficulties; being in a minority, they naturally pay higher taxes than do the Catholics, much as in the United States the heavier burden rests upon Catholics. The Protestant Board in Montreal maintains that the presence of the Jewish children in the schools causes and maintains a high rate of taxation. Several years ago a movement to have at least one Jewish representative on the Board was inaugurated but came to nothing, since Canada's Constitution—the British North America Act declares that the members of this Board shall be "Protestant and Christian." Meanwhile the Protestants, both clergy and laity, have begun to demand separate schools for the Jewish children.

A Difficult Situation

The reason for this demand is plain enough. The state of affairs existing in the Protestant schools is anomalous. Here, for instance, is a school of 1,000 pupils, of whom over 900 are Jews. Except in a few instances the teachers are Protestants, but no religious instruction can be given and the Jewish holidays force the closing of the institution. Or there is another school in which Jews and Protestants are about evenly divided, but in which there may or may not be any Jewish teachers. The holidays necessitate the combining of classes for some time, and may even bring the work of the entire school to a halt. Any teacher can imagine the many difficulties bound to arise from the situation, and it would seem that much real injustice can be done both Jews and Protestants under this arrangement. The Protestant children may be exposed to Jewish influences, in a manner repugnant to the creed of their parents, while the

"National Schools"

In 1923 the Provincial Government decided to make a change by directing that all Jewish taxes be paid into the Protestant panel. Moreover, a division of the remainder of the taxes was to be made to insure that the Protestants should receive their proper share. It was also decided that the tax of the "neutral" panel should be equal to the greater of the other taxes. This arrangement is temporary. Meanwhile there are two distinct groups in the Jewish community, one of which, composed of wealthy and influential Jews, is utterly opposed to the idea of a separate Jewish Board. This is not to be wondered at, since it is upon them that the burden of the taxes would fall; moreover, some of them believe that there is a certain social advantage to be gained under the present method, and this they are unwilling to relinquish. The other group, made up of the most scholarly and religious-minded Jews, is eager for separate schools wherein they can impart as they think best, religious instruction and Hebrew training. In Montreal the Protestants are unanimously opposed to the continuance of the Jewish children in their schools, and not a few anti-Catholics in both the Jewish and Protestant camps have been arguing for "national schools" from which, presumably, all religious instruction will be excluded. Although it is clear that the present system as it affects the Jew is unsatisfactory we may be thankful that the British North America Act cannot be changed in a day. For the present, the Protestant Committee of the Council of Public Instruction has decided to allow things to stand, but the Protestant Board, which is inferior to the Committee, has stated that the Jews must either leave the schools, or purchase from the Board those schools which are now occupied by Jewish children. The Jews are still divided in sentiment.

No Room for Jews in Catholic Schools

Can Catholics do anything to solve the problem? The truth is that we are in sore need of more schools for our own children, and even now the Catholic Commission of Montreal is trying to secure a loan of $5,000,000 from the Provincial Government for building purposes. We have, therefore, no room for the Jews. Further as Catholics, we would not and could not sacrifice the priceless advantages of a Catholic training to aid non-Christian education, however great the need might seem to be. It is necessary to stress the point since the suggestion has been made that the Catholic schools noted that the Jews have expressed an unwillingness to attend our schools. The Catholic authorities acted wisely when at the outset they foresaw that the attendance of Jewish children in Catholic schools would have brought about, insensibly perhaps, a considerable modification of the proper ideals of Catholic training and instruction. Only to-day are the Protestants realizing that instruction in religion has greatly suffered from the presence in ever increasing numbers of Jewish children in their schools.

M. M. Ussischkin, director of the Jewish National Fund in Palestine, who is now touring central Europe on behalf of the fund, intends to come shortly to the United States upon the same mission. At a public meeting held in Vienna Mr. Ussischkin declared that for the purpose of land purchases in Palestine it was essential for the fund to raise not less than $2,000,000 within the next two months.

Ever see real suds?

When the softest of water comes into violent and continuous contact with pure liquid soap in our washing vats the result is the most wonderful suds you ever saw. Pity the lurking dirt in any garment that enters that snowy-white, frothy-looking liquid. Then follow nine rinsings in tepid water. Do you wonder that our washings are so splendid. And remember, each is done separately, without any marking whatever. Phone to-day and we'll come right away.

survive the body? Science at its best cannot hope to give life that completeness and wholeness which the human heart yearns for. Religion is primarily an answer to that spiritual hunger. Fundamentally therefore religion stripped of superstition and paganism cannot be in conflict with science. They are rather mutually complimentary methods of answering human needs.

In the hopes that this meeting of the British Association of Science now honouring Toronto with its Convention may push its investigations of God's works everywhere without the slightest fear that scientific truth can ever clash with moral and religious truth, the Jewish Community of Toronto join their fellow citizens in extending a hearty welcome to the men and women who have come to pool their contributions for the sake of a happier and a better humanity.

EMPIRE OPENING

Your old friend, the comical "Sliding" Billy Watson, will head the big cast of his all-new "Fun Show" which appears as the opening week attraction at the Empire Theatre, Monday, August 18. "Sliding" Billy Watson has made audiences laugh for a score of years with his funny little glide and his rough-and-ready method of buffoonery. His funnisms are of the bludgeon type, never aiming for rapier-like wit, but always gaining solid laughter. This swing around the Columbia trail, "Sliding" Billy has what is heralded as his best production effort to date. If names mean anything, the star-producer has surrounded himself with a splendid group of players.

The prima donna role has been entrusted to the capable Franz Marie Texas, a beautiful woman and a fine vocalist. "Little" Anna Propp, touted as the smallest and best-figured miss in showland, is the soubrette, while Marie Vernon, blonde and talented is the ingenue. Mlle. Babette, French musical hall star, does a Parisian "vamp" role, with many unusual costume changes.

Clare Evans is "Sliding" Billy's side comedy partner, working in tramp character and contributing to many of the comedy scenes with the star. Paul H. West, he of the fine singing voice, will be much in evidence and also teaming it with Miss Texas in a group of duets. The straight man is Murray Harris, who is quite a dancer, and Frank Mallahan will appear in his familiar and likeable "two gun cowboy" role. Oliver de Grant has several roles in his care.

In the matter of vaudeville interludes "The Slider" has been careful to make ample provision, with a list that leads off with Phil Rose's Rhythm Kings, seven instrumentalists who play many different themes from rollicking jazz to grand opera.

Another novel offering will be the first appearance in Columbia Burlesque of the Three Eddies. Here is a trio of coloured young men whose middle name is syncopated stepping. They are likewise excellent singers and their act is asserted to be one of the season's "finds."

From big-time vaudeville come Creedor and Taye to please burlesque devotees with their sensational stepping routine. This is their first appearance in Columbia Burlesque. Backing this imposing array of principals, "Sliding" Billy has picked eighteen lively young lassies for the various ensembles. Each is said to be a "looker" as well as an accomplished singer and dancer. On paper at least, "Sliding" Billy Watson appears to have a world-beating entertainment.

SHEA'S

The season at Shea's Theatre opens with the matinee on Monday, August 18, with Eva Shirley and her Famous Players of Rhythm. The distinguished singing comedienne has the assistance of one of the best known instrumental orchestras. They are a jazz band and a symphony orchestra in one.

Vaudeville audiences have laughed and applauded Anderson and Burt in "Dizzy Heights." Elsie Pilcer and Dudley Douglas have come back to vaudeville. After firmly establishing themselves in the two a day they turned their hands to play producing and produced "The Lilies of the Field," a drama which enjoyed a six month run on Broadway, and three months in Chicago. Miss Pilcer played and Mr. Douglas managed. Now they are together again. They have a good act.

Edwin George is seen in "A Comedy of Errors." He calls himself "Almost a Juggler." Helen Higgins and Edith Blossom, with Horace Bentley, are new comers at Shea's, and have a novelty in dancing. Dudley Liddell and Del Gibson, just vaudevillians. Evangeline and Kathleen Murray in songs and dances, the Pickfords, introducing "Fun in a Restaurant," and Shea's New Review complete the programme.

Can We Hold the Jewish Youth?

(An Interview with Dr. David De Sola Pool)

BY LILLIAN BARON

"Your name may be Moses Cohen, and you may live in the ghetto, but you may still not be living in a Jewish atmosphere, or be constructively conscious of your Jewish blood and heritage. Such Jewish associations as are yours may be only because your name and race will not admit you to others. Your Jewish consciousness may be of a negative nature, not of a positive one."

Dr. David De Sola Pool, Rabbi of the Congregation Shearith Israel (Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue) of New York City, was speaking of the differences between a positive Jewish consciousness and one which is enforced by outside influences. He was speaking particularly of the necessity of cultivating and instilling that Jewish consciousness during the early, premature years of one's life.

"The finally determining impressionable age is during adolescence," Dr. Pool continued. "Until then the boy may have gone to Hebrew school and to synagogue. But as soon as he reaches the age of thirteen, and is officially admitted to the ranks of his people, paradoxically enough, he usually begins to break his contact with it. The Hebrew school stops. The boy makes rarer visits to the synagogue. For the most part he ceases to receive those positive Jewish influences which are rightfully his. Only twenty five per cent. of the Jewish children in America receive any kind of systematic Jewish schooling at all. The remaining seventy five per cent. are left to glean whatever they can, from the milieu, from hearsay, from their parents' observances of the holidays, from their Christian associations, and from other casual and unreliable sources. A still smaller percentage of the youth of adolescent age comes under systematic and constructive Jewish educational influences.

"It is obvious, then, that out of pure fairness to the child some sort of ordered Jewish contact must be provided. And it must be provided in a form in which its necessity is wrapped in attractive appeal. Youth craves fellowship and friendship with others of its own age and desires. And youth craves also self-expression.

"Combine the two. Give them first of all the chance to meet in congenial groups. Let the group with an ideal of learning and service take the place of the group devoted only to pleasure and of the possible and dangerous 'gang.' And through that group give the opportunity of satisfying their instinctive Jewish desires. Tinge it all with the glow of Jewishness, both as to contacts and expression, and you have the means of not only avoiding the dangers of drifting, but of establishing a formative influence in the years of groping and haphazard seeking.

"All this is not a simple thing to provide. But there is in existence an organization which does it and which does it successfully. I am thinking of Young Judea. That national organization, with a membership at present of some fourteen thousand, has a programme which provides and supervises a continual campaign of education. It is an extension system, since its work cannot be done in the classroom or during school hours. But it educates by appealing to the instincts of the youth.

"You must realize that a mere recital of the Jewish past is not enough to hold the child. He will soon tire of hearing the names Isaac, Abraham and Jacob. And even the romance attached to these names has no appeal for the present-day youth. The past has to be brought into contact with the present. Let the youth dramatize the stories in the Bible and Talmud, let him for a is Moses or Bar Kochba, and the child will be left with a vivid impression of the dramatic incidents of the past, and an invulnerable pride in the fact that he is lineally connected with it. The same is true of every incident and every festival in Jewish history.

"And another thing. The past, even when it is brought into the present, is not sufficiently alluring to the child. You must talk to him of the present developing into the future, because it is that in which the growing youth is most interested. In the Young Judea programme, the future takes a prominent place in the programme of interests. Every historical story that is told, or acted, or talked about, is connected with Palestine, and will be linked with the meaning which that country had in Jewish history. And the child will inevitably begin to think of a Jewish future. Not for himself, perhaps but for the others he has read or heard about. He will realize that Judaism and Jewish history are not completed, and that what he has learned must continue to exist and to grow. And gradually the why and how of that future existence will begin to solve itself in his brain, and he will, in some way or another, interest himself in whatever means or movements are under way to insure that distinctively Jewish future, with a living Hebrew language, contact with the soil, and a normal Jewish life.

"The primary aim, as you see, is to create an interest in things Jewish. And that having been done, it is necessary to give the proper living knowledge. Without Jewish knowledge, Jewish pride is nothing more than prejudice in one's own favour, and that is questionably a commendable characteristic. But with Jewish knowledge Jewish interest gives the foundation for future loyalty, a loyalty with both background and vision. It will mean an understanding conception of the history of the Jewish people, and an idealistic belief in its future.

"Can we hold the youth forever? Well, there is no guarantee. There are no oaths of allegiance. But I do believe that the man or woman who, during the years of childhood and adolescence has belonged to an organization like Young Judea, is far less apt to move entirely out of the realm of Judaism. I believe that intermarriage and similar defections, religious or otherwise, from the ranks of the Jewish people are most unlikely to occur among those who have come under its formative influence. Some deeply-founded Jewish loyalty will have been left with them. They may not all remain religious or become closely affiliated with any positive Jewish movements. But many of them will; and even those that will not will be conscious that something has been left with them. They will know that Young Judea uncovered for them an understanding of what runs in their blood, and banked it with the protections of comprehension. They will remain conscious of the fact that, as Jews, they are part of a great progressing Jewish purpose, and will cherish that consciousness. They will belong to more serious Jewish organizations, not because they cannot obtain admittance to others, but because their released Jewish desires will incline toward that direction. They will not be Jewish Babbitts, prejudiced and blind without cause, but open-minded, well-instructed men and women, who know the various ways that are open to them and have chosen the one that is theirs."

Abdul Salim Rachman, the leader of the Arab extremists, was arrested at Tul Kerem. A search of his home disclosed compromising documents showing that he was involved in anti govern-
